From a French Colonial settlement New Orleans has grown to be the largest and greatest city in the South with a population of 700,000. In area New Orleans covers 366 square miles of land and water. New Orleans is geographically built somewhat like a saucer, the rim being the seawall on Lake Pontchartrain and the levees of the Mississippi. The lowest part of the saucer is about 4 feet below sea level, so all rain water falling in the lowest part has to be raised up to the rim and pumped out into the lake. An elaborate system of pumps located in different sections of our city plus a system of underground canals drain the annual average rainfall of 69 inches from our streets. Our tour takes us through beautiful City Park, once a sugar plantation owned by Louis Allard. It has 1440 acres and is reputed to be the sixth largest public park in this country. The Delgado museum housing some of the art treasures collected in this part of the South faces us as we enter the park. Next come the duelling oaks where affairs of honor were settled. We drive past the picnic grounds - live oaks festooned with moss. The Suicide Oak where a number of people have ended their lives.
