On May 13th, the day after the brilliant work at the salient, General Barlow issued the following order: headquarters First Division, Second Corps, May 13th, 18(34. orders. Colonel James A. Beaver, One Hundred and Forty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, is hereby assigned to the command of the Third brigade, and will report to these headquarters at once. By command Brigadier-general Barlow, john Hancock, A. A. G. He of course reported, but asked to be allowed to decline the proffered advancement. He preferred, he said, not to leave his regiment. He felt it his duty to stay by the men he had brought into the field. This was the second or third time he had declined promotion, and Barlow asked, rather sternly, when he would be willing to take a brigade? When the losses of war leave me the ranking officer of the brigade in which my regiment is serving, was the prompt reply. XXIII. A Confederate s Story Of Spottsylvania. When the Confederate General George H. Stuart surrendered to Colonel Beaver, his staff, and most, if not all, of his brigade were already in the hands of our successful troops. Among the number was Captain J. McHenry Howard, his inspectorgeneral and chief of staff. He was a careful, painstaking officer, with exceptional opportunities of knowing the movements of the Confederate troops, and their position when the salient at Spottsylvania was charged and captured....
